How to Give Feedback Without Friction

Three simple ways

Tolulope Michael

Start with Intent

Ask yourself: is this about helping or criticizing?

When your team knows your goal is to support them, they're far more open to hearing you.

Focus On Behavior, Not the Person

Say “the report missed the deadline” instead of “you’re always late.”

It removes blame and keeps the conversation objective.

Make It a Two-Way Conversation

Ask questions like “How did you feel about this project?” or “What support do you need next time?”

This turns feedback into a dialogue, not a lecture.
